NEWS FROM THE RARE BOOK ROOM

Vol.2, no.3, pt. III
December, 1967.

Cameron Library,
University of Alberta,
Edmonton, Alberta.

This issue of the "News from the Rare Book Room" is the third part of the centennial series of the Dr. A.C. Rutherford Canadiana Collection. Part one records "Western Canadiana to 1915"; part two lists the books in the collection on "Exploration, voyages and travel"; and part three records "General Canadiana (Eastern) to 1915". This includes literary works and other miscellaneous items. All books listed in part I and II have been excluded in part III, except in very rare cases; so all three parts must be consulted together in order to secure a complete record of the Dr. A.C. Rutherford Canadiana Collection.

A supplementary issue, part IV will be compiled during 1968 which will list items of local and regional interest, with the main emphasis upon Alberta. This will complete the centennial Series.

Each item in this issue was checked against one of the following authorities:

This is the plan of a small fortress that Champlain built on his arrival in Quebec in 1608. In his "Works" he says: "I had a number of men cut down the trees and clear the ground for our habitation. The first building erected was the store where we could place our food under cover ... While our carpenters, sawyers and other labourers worked on our lodgings ... I directed others to clear the land and make a garden... for the earth seemed quite fertile.

The Dr. A.C. Rutherford Canadiana Collection, part III consists of books published, mainly, in the 19th century, with a minor number of items in the 18th and early 20th centuries. The earliest volume in pt. 3 of the collection, and one of two published in the 17th century is that by Jean Baptiste Sainte-Vallier "Estat présent de l'eglise et de la colonie Françoise dans la Nouvelle France", published in Paris by Robert Pepie in 1688. Bishop Sainte-Vallier was the successor to Bishop Laval, and his work is one of the very earliest histories of the colony.

Forty-eight titles in the collection were published in the 18th century in Great Britain, Europe and a few in the United States, but not one in Canada. However the tempo of the printing and publishing of books increased from andante to allegro in Canada by the end of the 19th century, in spite of publishing difficulties caused by the book trade in Great Britain and the United States. One hundred and twenty-eight items of the total books in the 19th century in the collection, were published in this country.

The discovery of the new world naturally made the British and European public eager to read about this new land and curious to see any available pictures of its physical features, settlements inhabitants etc. As time went on the authors of the numerous books of description, exploration, history and travel in the new world found that they had a better market for their books when they included illustrations or "views" of the country. How did Canada appear to the men who visited, travelled and finally wrote books about their journeys in the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries before photography was invented and widely used about the mid-19th century (1840 approximately). In order to illustrate their books they had to draw what they saw themselves, as Champlain and Hennepin did, or to rely upon the imagination of artists, and hope that the representation would somehow be close to the true scene for often the work of the artists was more imaginery and fanciful than exact.

One of the earliest drawings of any definite area of Canada illustrates the Works of Samuel de Champlain, published in Paris in 1613. This is an architectural drawing or plan of his first residence in Quebec in 1608. Unfortunately it does not give any idea of the characteristic features of the surrounding countryside at that time. (see: illus. opposite page)

Another first-hand "view" of the country in what is now Ontario, is that of Niagara Falls drawn by the famous and controversial Friar Louis Hennepin to illustrate his "New discovery of a vast country in America" first published in 1697. This was the first of a long series of paintings of "The Falls". It was also supposed to be the first topographical "view" of this country. (See: illus. p. 25)

A view of what was supposed to be Quebec City - from Claude Bacqueville de Potherie's "Histoire de l'Amerique", published in Paris in 1722.
(See note in introduction)

One of the most interesting "views" is that in the "Histoire de l'Amerique" by the French naval officer Claude Bacqueville de Potherie, who spent some time on duty in New France, 1697-1714, and gave his first-hand observations on the life and times in the Quebec of that period. The illustration is an attractive sketch of what is supposed to be the first picture of Quebec City. This same illustration was later used in the works of Father S.J. Charlevoix in his "Histoire et description generale de la Nouvelle France", published in Paris in 1744. (See: opposite page)

In 1712, the missionary priest Father Joseph Lafitau reached Canada from France and travelled among the Iroquis Indians until 1718. On his return to France he published his "Moeurs des sauvages Ameriquains comparées aux moeurs des premier temps"in 1774. The two volumes were illustrated with numerous plates, one of which shows the Indians method of making a portage around a falls and rapids. (See: illus. p.31)

During the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries the Canadian landscape as well as the villages and towns were painted by a large group of travelling British military and naval artist-officers who had been trained in the British military art schools for the purpose of recording physical and other features of the country for military purposes. Many of these were retired from military service and now held civil positions, and continued their painting for pleasure, and in some cases to add to their income. A few of these "topographers" were Thomas Davis (1737-1812); James Peachey (d.1799); James Cockburn (1779-1847); Sir James Hope (1785-1871); W.J. Bennett (1787-1844); Wm. Eager (1796-1837); James Duncan (1805-1881); Robert Petley (1809-1869); Coke Smyth (in Canada 1828); Henry J. Warre (1819-98) who is best known for his book of paintings on his military journey to the West Coast; and many others.

One of the most important and representative of this group was George Heriot (1766-1844). He was deputy postmaster general of British North America and an accomplished painter. In 1807 he published the journal of his "Travels through the Canadas" in the course of his duties and illustrated his book with his own sketches. One of these paintings is "the circular dance of the Canadians or La Danse Ronde" which shows something of the life of the people of that period most attractively presented with the villagers, of all ages, dancing outdoors with trees, foliage and a house or Inn in the background. (See: illus. p.39)

The Landscape and the life of the people was also depicted by another type of artist, such as William J. Bartlett, (1809-54) who was a professional illustrator. His most important work in Canada were his illustrations of N.P. Willis's "Canadian scenery", published in 2 volumes in London, England, in 1842. (See: illus p.54)

The most famous and popular, although not necessarily the best artist of this period in Canada, was Cornelius Kreighoff (1812-72). He lived and painted at the same time as Paul Kane (1810-71) who was famous for his paintings of the Indians of the Canadian West. Kreighoff married a French Canadian girl and remained in Canada for the remainder of his life.

Copy of the original Harris painting by F.S. Challener, which was completed and hung in the new Sir John A. Macdonald Hotel in Edmonton in 1915. It is still hanging over the fireplace in the Hotel (See note opposite.)

His work was lively and colourful and depicted the life of the pioneer villages in an earthy and humourous manner, so that he has often been called the Breughel of Canada. (See: illus. p. 34)

Three additional artists of the 19th century should be mentioned, although they were not landscape painters, but added to the record of the life and times of that era. One of these was Mrs. Agnes Fitzgibbon Chamberlin (1833-1913) whose exquisite flower paintings illustrate the botanical work of her aunt, Mrs. Catherine Parr (Strickland) Traill (1802-99). Their joint effort produced the very successful "Canadian wild flowers" painted, lithographed and published in a handsome folio volume in 1868; the first illustrated book of this kind in Canada. It was reprinted in 4 editions up to 1895. (See: illus. p. 50 and opposite p. 1)

A distinguished painter who turned his talents to drawing cartoons, to earn his living, was Henri Julien (1854-1908). He worked for various newspapers, including the 'Montreal Star'. His "Songs of the By-Town (Ottawa) Coons" was a political satire on the Laurier Government, about 1896-1900. (See: illus. p. 28)

Richard Harris (1849-1919) is included because he is the artist of the popular group painting "The Fathers of Confederation"; although his fame in his own period was for his portraits of most of the important men of his time. His painting of those attending the Quebec Conference of 1864 "The Fathers of Confederation" was commissioned in 1883-84 to be hung in the "Main Block" of the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa. As many of the Fathers of Confederation were still living, he was able to study them personally and also used available portraits. Fortunately, Frederick S. Challener was commissioned to copy the original in 1914, to be hung in the New Macdonald Hotel in Edmonton, for, the original was burned in the fire in the "Main Block" of the Parliament Buildings, in 1916. Challener's copy was hung in the Macdonald Hotel in Edmonton in 1915. In 1917-18 he painted a second copy to be hung in the Ontario Parliament Buildings in Toronto. No doubt thousands of copies of this painting have been reproduced and it is probably familiar to every school child in Canada during this centennial year of 1967. (See: illus. opposite)

After the perfection of the invention of photography by the mid-nineteenth century it was not necessary to depend upon the sometimes more fanciful than exact sketches of the artists for a record of the countryside and life of the times. However this brief report would not by complete without mentioning the most important and authoritative historical artist of the late nineteenth to the mid-twentieth century, Charles W. Jeffreys (1869-1951). His important and historically precise drawings and paintings in his "The picture gallery of Canadian history" published in Toronto in 1942-45 in three volumes is now almost the "Bible" pictorally of Canadian historians.
